

Followings are against the law when using livelihood protection

When you cannot work due to any reason and cannot gain money for living expenses, livelihood protection system is available. This system is to guarantee the right to live, but most of you may not understand its strict rule.

While you receive the livelihood protection, you have to keep the rules. If you don't keep the rules, you have to pay back the money or you cannot receive the livelihood protection, in some cases. Here are some representative cases for reference.

For any inquiry please contact the person in charge of livelihood protection.

- If you received any money, be sure to declare the government office.
If you received any salary, life insurance, pocket money, or a present of money, you have a duty to declare all the money you are given to the government office. If you fail to declare, it is deemed as a wrong action and you cannot receive the livelihood protection any more. You must report to the government office even if the amount you received is large or small. Contact the person in charge, until when to declare.
- Report to the government office when you go abroad temporary
Before leaving Japan, you have to submit a report filling (1) the purpose of going abroad (2) duration of going abroad (3) how you made the fee to go abroad. When you come back Japan, you have to report to the government office and submit your passport.
- You should not send the livelihood protection money to your country
The livelihood protection money is given for your household. Use them for yourself, such as for foods for your family and the school expense. You should not send them to your homeland or not lend to your friend, even if your friend asks for it.
- You should not keep anyone to your house without permission
You should not keep anyone (friends or relatives) to your house without permission of the government office, even if the person has difficulty. If you really need to live together, consult with the government office and get permission to live together.
- When you go to the hospital, be sure to report the government office
When you get a livelihood protection and want to go to a hospital, you will need a medical card. If you don't bring the medical card to the hospital, you may not be able to see a doctor. You must offer to the government office that you are going to go to a hospital. Even in case of emergency, you should make a phone call to the government office as far as possible.
- When you get a call from the government office and could not answer it, be sure to call back
Phone call from the government office must be an important issue. When you have a call while you are out, you should call back when you notice it. In case of any unclear documents given from the government office, be sure to make it clear by asking the person in charge. Do not leave it unclear. When there is any document you cannot read, come to FICEC so that we can help read it.
